E-COMPETENCIES FOR E-GOVERNMENT: CHANGING ROLE OF THE FEDERAL INFORMATION PROFESSIONAL

With the advent of the worldwide Web and the emergence of E-Government as the watchword for federal agencies, the role of federal librarians has changed dramatically in just a few years. What new competencies have professional information managers already developed to adapt to this swift pace of technological change and what additional skills will they need to traverse this new electronic world in the next decade?

The 2004 FLICC Information Policy Forum will address some of the major information issues ushered in with E-Government programs and will identify the competencies needed to address developing trends in electronic content.

For Fiscal Year 2003, the President responded to the nation's evolving need for information professionals by introducing his program for "Recruiting and Educating Librarians for the 21st Century." Congress subsequently authorized $10 million in funding for the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) to provide grants for recruitment and education projects in the field of librarianship. Although focused primarily on academic, public and school libraries, this new national initiative acknowledges that the profession is critical for the nation to maintain its leadership role in the world and succeed in the global market place. It also offers financial support for the field to update its focus, its skills, and its role in electronic content management, digital reference and archiving, and knowledge management. How will this understanding of the changing role of librarianship outside the federal government inform the actions of key decision makers within the government?

With 10 years at the Office of Personnel Management (the last four years as its director), combined with her current position as executive director of the Special Libraries Association, Forum Keynote Speaker Janice Lachance has a unique vantage point for projecting future competencies for federal librarianship. Ms. Lachance's remarks will form the backdrop for a panel discussion of the competencies side of the E-Competencies for E-Government equation. The panel, comprised of representatives from academic, federal and special libraries, will be moderated by Dr. Robert Martin, IMLS Director.

Leading off the afternoon review of E-Government issues will be Karen Evans, Associate Director for Information Technology and E-Gov at the White House Office of Management and Budget (OMB). As chair of the Executive Branch CIO Council and the "E-Gov Czar" for the president's management initiatives, Ms. Evans has a pivotal position in implementing the E-Government Act of 2002, the Federal Enterprise Architecture, interagency E-Gov initiatives, and related programs. She will discuss what CIOs and agency program managers are doing to advance electronic government and how information specialists responsible for deploying content can assist these efforts in their respective agencies.

Following Ms. Evans' remarks, a panel comprised of major players from several E-Government programs will discuss policy issues they have encountered and progress they have made to improve content management of electronic information in the U.S. Government. The formal presentations will conclude with a review of content rights management issues faced by government information providers, creators and consumers.

Wrapping up the day's topics will be Donna Scheeder from the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress, who will send participants home with a few key ideas to ponder and selected action items to address.
